BLACK	regular consonants or blends	with, teach
GREEN	irregular vowel or consonant sounds	acknowledge

Overview

The Big Picture! The English language can be very confusing due to the variety of spellings for the same sounds, and different ways to pronounce the same letters. The Reading With Color passages and games immerse students in the spectrum of sounds and spellings with just seven easy-to-learn colors. These colors identify types of vowel sounds, silent letters, specific blended sounds, and words with unusual spellings.

Bingo for Success The game included in this booklet is one of many Reading With Color Bingo games designed to help students learn phonics and gain reading confidence. The only prerequisite is knowledge of the alphabet letters. Each game focuses on 24 words from a specific passage, and the same 24 words are on each card. Game word hints are provided so that students can narrow the search to words with certain colors or sounds. A Bingo game is an equalizer that allows all students to participate and be successful.

Words in Passage but Not in Game acknowledge

About the Passage The reading passage was chosen based on length and interest level. Most of the words are in the listening vocabulary of beginning readers. The goal is that students will learn to read the passage independently after playing the Bingo game several times. If students can already read many words by sight, the game will strengthen their understanding of phonics.

Using the Passage Play the Bingo game several times, until students are familiar with all 24 words. After each game, read the passage again and/or have students read it in unison. In some cases the passage may have a few words not used in the Bingo game. You may want to read the extra words with the students.

Extending the Ideas Phonics clues using colors can be incorporated into lessons in any reading curriculum. Also, by using additional Reading With Color Bingo games, students will learn to read other passages and improve their abilities with phonics. Reading With Color Advantages

Confusing Aspects of Reading

It's not easy to know which vowel sound to say.

Many letter groupings are confusing to “sound out” even though they are easy to learn. For example, to pronounce “e-r” students may say “Eh-Ruh” instead of “ER.”

Some words have silent letters. Either vowels or consonants can be silent.

Some words have strange spellings. Students get frustrated when trying to read these using phonics.

Students are sometimes taught to sound out words “letter by letter” even though consonants cannot be pronounced alone.

Reading passages may not sound like common language because longer words are often avoided in reading lessons.

With typical reading curriculums, students must study for years before seeing the “big picture” of variations in English language and spelling.

How Reading With Color Helps

Long vowels are red, short vowels are orange, the “uh” sound is purple, and other vowels are green.

The vowel-consonant groupings ending in R, L, and NG are shown in blue to be pronounced together. (These groupings are common but cause much difficulty.)

Silent letters are shown in gray, so students will know not to make any sound for those letters.

Letters with unusual pronunciations are shown in green. Words containing green letters should be memorized.

Colors help students to read the correct vowel sounds along with consonants rather than trying to say a separate sound for each letter.

Because colors provide phonics clues, more difficult words can be included. It can be just as easy to learn long words as short words! Also, because words are part of a meaningful passages, students can use context clues to help them learn and recall words.

By reading passages shown with color clues, students learn about spelling variations and can quickly overcome their misconceptions.

About the Author's Research

Elinor Boeke is an elementary reading specialist with more than 30 years of experience as a reading teacher and tutor. She developed, tested, and improved the color clues through her work with students who had a difficult time learning to read. Angie Seltzer is an elementary curriculum specialist who has developed many educational games. Students of all ages have been very successful in learning to read with Reading With Color.

Bingo Instructions

Advance Preparation Print pages 3, 7, and 8 which show the reading passage, color guide, game words, and game word hints. Cut out the game words and place them in a hat or bowl. For durability, you may want to tape the words onto file cards. Print out as many Bingo cards from pages 9-40 as needed to have one unique card for each student. Distribute each Bingo card along with about 20 pennies or other markers.

Introduction Explain that the game has words from a passage of the New International Version of the Bible. Read the passage aloud to the students. Explain that most words from the passage are in the Bingo game. Once they learn the words, they will be able to read the passage. Briefly read the color guide and remind students that long vowels make the sound of the letter. It is not necessary to elaborate on the color guide, because students will learn the color meanings as they play the Bingo game.

How to Play Have students place a marker on the center FREE space. Then choose a game word from the hat or bowl at random and read it aloud. Each student should place a marker on the word that was called. (Every word is somewhere on each card.) As the students search for the word, use the word in a sentence and give a hint about the word, as shown on page 8. You may want to spell the word or give additional hints as appropriate, until the students have had time to find the word. Then mark the called word on the game word list or on card #1, which has the words in order of their appearance in the passage. Continue calling out words and hints.

How to Win Once a student's card has a line of five markers in a column, row, or diagonal, the student with that card should say "BINGO." Then the student should read each word in the line so you can verify the winning card. If desired, continue the game until a few more students have five markers in a line.

Variations Continue calling words until someone makes a specific letter or shape such as X, T, Z, or a box as shown below.
